INSTRUCTIONS: Self-Proving Affidavit

Your state allows you to make your will self-proving. Doing this has absolutely nothing to do with your will's legality—a properly signed and witnessed will is legal whether or not it is self-proving.

However, by making your will self-proving, you give the court additional assurance that the will was made by you. This may speed the admission of your will to probate and make things easier for your personal representative, especially if none of your witnesses can be located after your death.

To make your will self-proving, you and your witnesses must sign the attached affidavit (a written statement under oath) in front of a notary public. Then you should attach the affidavit to your will. Follow these steps:

1. Sign and witness your will exactly as described in the instructions accompanying the will.
2. Either have a notary present at the will signing, or find one later. Either way, you and your witnesses must personally appear before the notary and identify yourselves with a driver's license, birth certificate, passport or other official identification. (The notary can tell you which documents to bring.)
3. If the notary has his or her own form for making your will self-proving, use that form and follow the notary's instructions.
4. If you use our affidavit, put your name and your witnesses' names in the spaces indicated in the affidavit, and give it to the notary. He or she will have you and your witnesses swear to the truth of the statements in the affidavit. (These are basically the same statements you used when the will itself was being signed and witnessed.) The notary will then date and sign the affidavit and put his or her notary seal on it.
5. Staple the affidavit to your will. If you ever make a new will, you should also redo your affidavit.

REMINDER: You and your witnesses must sign the will in addition to signing this affidavit. The affidavit and the will are two separate documents.
